18. 다음 글에서 밑줄 친 It 이 가리키는 것으로 가장 적절한 것은?

It is a very simple and competitive match of strength between two teams. The competition can be held outdoors or indoors. It began as early as 500 B.C. in Greece. It was classified on the basis of the total body weight of athletes in each team. The head, the first man in each team, leads team members with the help of the tail, the last man. In this game, the key is to pull the rope in a straight line from the head to the tail. The team pulling the rope 4 meters from the starting position is declared the winner. The rope is about 35 meters long.

① 줄다리기 ② 기마전 ③ 단체줄넘기
④ 고무줄놀이 ⑤ 외줄타기

19. 다음 글에서 밑줄 친 this 의 의미로 가장 적절한 것은?

I served the ball low and it hit the net. I missed the best chance to win. It was so careless of me. I was disappointed in myself. I focused on the mistake that I had made, instead of doing my best to the end of the game. By losing the next two points, I lost the ping-pong match at last. Trying to cheer me up, my friends said "Good luck next time!", but it didn't help me feel better. I went home depressed. I thought of my mistakes over and over. Finally, I came to realize that I lost the game because of this, which was a great lesson to me.

① 승리를 확신한 것 ② 부상을 입은 것
③ 요행을 바랬던 것 ④ 실수에 연연한 것
⑤ 연습을 게을리 했던 것

Early months of Gombe, Africa were a time of delight discovery, for I learned something new each day about the chimpanzees. As I got to know them as individuals, I named them. I had no idea that _____ the ethological discipline of the early 1960s, this was inappropriate – I should have given them more objective numbers. I also described their vivid personalities, which was another sin because only humans were believed to have personalities at that time. It was an even worse crime to admit that the chimpanzees had human-like emotions. In those days it was held that only humans had mind, and only humans were capable of rational thought.

Like the prices of products in markets, interest rates follow _____. As banks run short of money available for loans, interest rates go high. Higher interest rates lead people to save money. This process results in piling up dollars, which makes new loans possible. On the other hand, when the banks have enough money to loan, they lower interest rates. The lowered interest rates make people lose their desire for depositing money. Consequently, less money flows into the banks, which will decrease the money they keep.

My parents never had much money, and sometimes even food was not enough for my family. Every penny my father earned was spent looking after my sick grandma. The last few days before my father's payday were a little bit terrible. There just wasn't enough food to go around. I can remember how much we waited for the payday as if it were a holiday. On the payday, my mother would go shopping. When she returned home with the groceries, my sisters and I enjoyed the food. On this special day, we would eat until we couldn't eat anymore because we knew that as time went by, _____.

① my father would get paid
② they were going shopping again
③ my grandmother would be better soon
④ food would become short soon
⑤ the price of food would go up

Instead of firing workers at difficult times, some companies cut off salary and a few hours from everybody's workweek. It is called "work sharing system", which has positive effects on both workers and companies. While workers do not have to worry about being fired, companies can keep the good quality of the work because they still have experienced workers. Consequently, companies with work sharing system are more likely to meet increased demand when business turns out better. Also, when business gets better, employees are more willing to work long hours for companies that helped them through tough times.

Once upon a time there was a writer from Denmark whose stories were filled with tragedy. Critics disliked his conversational writing style. However, his revised tales became best-selling children's books in the neighboring lands of Germany and Britain. Then the Danish praised their storyteller as the genius creator of a new literary genre, a fairy tale. In spite of his fame, he lived a miserable life and died alone in 1875 at the age of 70, far from "living happily ever after." The storyteller was Hans Christian Andersen, and this year is the bicentennial of his birth.

Scientists hope they can use the effects of the sun at work. They have conducted an experiment to find ways to make the workers more efficient. Though the study isn't yet completed, initial results are promising. Researchers compared the workers' performance under the regular lamps and under the brighter ones. They found significant improvement under the brighter lamps, which suggests it's possible to trick employees' biological clocks. A worker says the brighter lights kept him "more awake and more focused" and able to work to the end of a night shift without feeling tired.

Time seemed to stand still as we lazily floated on the water. The sky above was amazingly blue. The trees, such a brilliant green, were hanging low over the water which reflected the sun. The water seemed to be filled with hundreds of miniature shining mirrors. Our tanned skin was bathed by the warm rays of the shining sun. The comforting sounds of the water. The refreshing scent of the woods. What could be more perfect? I felt as if I were in heaven. If only this could last longer!

Overworked doctors who are short of sleep are not only a potential danger to patients but also a danger on the road. A professor in Harvard Medical School surveyed 2,700 medical doctors who worked at the hospitals affiliated to universities in America. He divided all the doctors into the two groups; a 24-hour shift group and a 12-hour shift one. Doctors in a 24-hour shift were 3 times more likely to have a car accident than those working 12-hour shift. But some hospitals still don't provide beds for doctors, so they can't help driving home after long shifts. This condition should be taken into careful consideration.

What most people don't realize is how many times each day they make routine assumptions about the intention of the other speaker. Good listening requires you not to assume anything about the intention of a speaker. This rule is especially true in conversations with your family, friends, and co-workers. You know how they use words. This familiarity can lead you to believe that you understand their point, without carefully considering what they are actually saying to you. Be careful not to jump to conclusions about the speakers' intentions, especially with those who are close to you.

> In contrast, in the "passionate-passionate" couple, both members are emotional.

How can you find out if you and your wife or husband are likely to be a good couple? In an attempt to answer it, some psychologists studied married couples and found that there are several types of couples. (①) One type is the "calm-calm" couple, both of whom are so calm that they hardly show their anger or excitement. (②) They almost never fight, almost never get angry, and live a happy life together. (③) They often argue and sometimes have fights, but they are more romantic than other types of couples. (④) As a result, this kind of couple is also likely to stay together. (⑤) A third type of couple, the "calm-passionate" couple, will be the most difficult in living together because one member tends to be calm while the other is passionate.

David Hunter has a successful, busy life, hardly sparing time to share with his wife. Recently, during a storm all the lights went out. He and his wife couldn't do anything but to get into bed early and talk. There were no particular topics. No interruptions. Later, David realized that it had been a long time since they had talked like that. When younger without enough money to spend, they used to talk hours and hours, taking long walks in the park. After the incident, life returned to "normal" with more quality time together. All he hopes now is to make as much time as he can for conversation with his wife.

While I was turning over the pages of my high school yearbook, one of the happiest moments in the good old days ran across my mind. What caught my attention, among others, was the pictures of students competing in individual and team races. With shouts and cheers thundering in the whole school, regular announcements of the scores increased the tension as each team took turns in the lead. Finally, after the spectacular team relays, the competition was over and the results were announced. The winning team of the year was Dragons. The principal congratulated all the players for their fantastic efforts.

I woke up and I felt really tired and seasick. The deck hand was shaking my shoulder. I slowly came to the realization that I was in a ship and it was my turn for anchor duty. I wondered to myself exactly why I had taken this trip in the first place. I wanted to go back home at once, giving up everything. However, I got out of my bed and climbed up on the deck. The night sky was magnificent. The stars were brighter than any I had ever seen. I looked out at the calm sea and smelled the salty air. Well, seven days had passed and I was still surviving. I was thinner than when I had started, but I was satisfied with myself for sticking with this course and getting closer to my goal.

Last spring some of our students were visiting another city. While they stayed there, they decided not to use their slang. However, in spite of their efforts, they found that (a) "embarrassing monsters" kept appearing in their conversations.

This was an example of using undesirable language which we find common in our school. The students seem to speak (b) foreign languages to anyone outside the school. (c) This unique slang often prevents the students from expressing themselves clearly in conversations, classroom talks, and other situations.

Here is another example of a senior boy, who depends too much upon slang and fails to build a large vocabulary. He lost a chance to get a job because he didn't know the meaning of the word, "vivacious", which should be in any (d) sophomore's working vocabulary.

We should not forget that although slang is understood here, (e) our favorite words will get us in trouble when we are in college or in the business world.

The political leaders in the European Union calls __(A)__ one of the most threatening issues that we are facing today. TV and newspapers warn of intense hurricanes, mega-droughts, famine, and the extinction of the human race. However, the world's top economists have different opinions. They say "This is a Hollywood fiction. Such exaggeration has prevented us from asking ourselves where we can spend our money as efficiently as possible for the Third World." When they met at Copenhagen last May, they asked that very question. They ranked Global Warming at the __(B)__ of the priority list.

There are many better ways to help the poor in the Third World than by fighting against global warming. Directly dealing with the most urgent issues such as disease, hunger, and polluted water will help the most. Poverty is a huge problem, which causes these issues now. This does not mean we should ignore climate change. But it does mean that there are far better ways to spend $150 billion a year. The world political leaders should give up their unreasonable beliefs in __(C)__ threat of climate changes and start to do some real good for poor people in the Third World.

(A)

"Please mister... please, I'm sorry... I didn't know what else to do," the kid said. "I threw the brick because no one else would stop. My brother fell out of his wheelchair and I can't lift him up." Now crying, the boy asked the man, "Would you please help me get him back into his wheelchair?" The man was moved beyond words. He lifted the boy's brother back into the wheelchair, then took out his handkerchief and wiped the cuts. "Thank you and may God bless you," the grateful child said to him.

(B)

The man simply watched the little boy push his brother down the sidewalk toward their home. It was a long, slow walk back to the sports car. He never did repair the side door to remind him of this message: don't go through life so fast. Someone might have to throw a brick to stop you.

(C)

A young and successful businessman was driving a bit too fast in his new sports car. He was watching a kid running out from between parked cars and slowed down when he thought he saw something. As his car passed, a brick hit the car's side door! Getting angry, he jumped out of the car and grabbed the kid, shouting, "What was that all about and who are you? That's a new car and the repairs are going to cost a lot of money. Why did you do it?"
