(A)

However, there are two disadvantages to these computer news services. One is that you might miss some fascinating news about a topic that may interest you. And the other is that you miss the wonderful experience of lying on the sofa on a rainy Sunday afternoon with a cup of coffee and looking through every section of the daily newspaper.

(B)

Such a specialized paper exists—on your computer. There are many online news services just for you. They allow you to focus on your interests and quickly find articles that you'll probably want to read. With them, you just type a topic under "Search" or choose one of their topics.

(C)

Suppose you absolutely hate news about crime and don't want to see it on the front page of your daily paper every day. Suppose you love some subject—astronomy, for instance—that is often hard to find in the paper. Is there a newspaper that is written just for you, with only articles that interest you?
